We asked the nurses at Tufts:

Q.

Would you encourage a job-seeking nurse to take a position at Tufts Medical Center?

A.

70 percent of the RNs currently working at Tufts said “no.” *

- At Tufts, there are not enough nurses on staff to provide the safe, quality care that patients deserve.
- At Tufts, nurses are not compensated competitively.
- And at Tufts, management refuses to do what’s necessary to resolve these two issues.

Tufts management: Settle a fair contract so that your patients get the care they need and deserve, and so that you can attract and retain the area’s top nursing talent.

Norm as jolly old St.
Nick? Yes, please.

MATT JUUL

If you go:

George Wendt is heading back to Boston this holiday season, but it's not for another round of drinks with the "Cheers" gang.

The actor will reprise his role as Santa in the production of "Elf: The Musical," which stops at the Wang Theatre in Boston at the end of November before heading to the Theater at Madison Square Garden in New York to close out 2017. Wendt, who played jolly old St. Nick in the play's original Broadway run, is excited to return to the iconic role.

"It's such a beloved character," Wendt tells Metro. "My favorite part is being on board with the whole ensemble and putting it together as we always do. Being on stage is kind of the gravy."

Considering his long history with Boston thanks to his fan-favorite role as Norm on "Cheers," Wendt is especially pumped to bring the musical to the Hub this holiday season.

The 68-year-old actor loves visiting the city, which he calls "a great theater town." Having performed on stage in Boston as a juror in "Twelve Angry Men" several years ago, Wendt is also excited to play a more fun-loving character this time around.

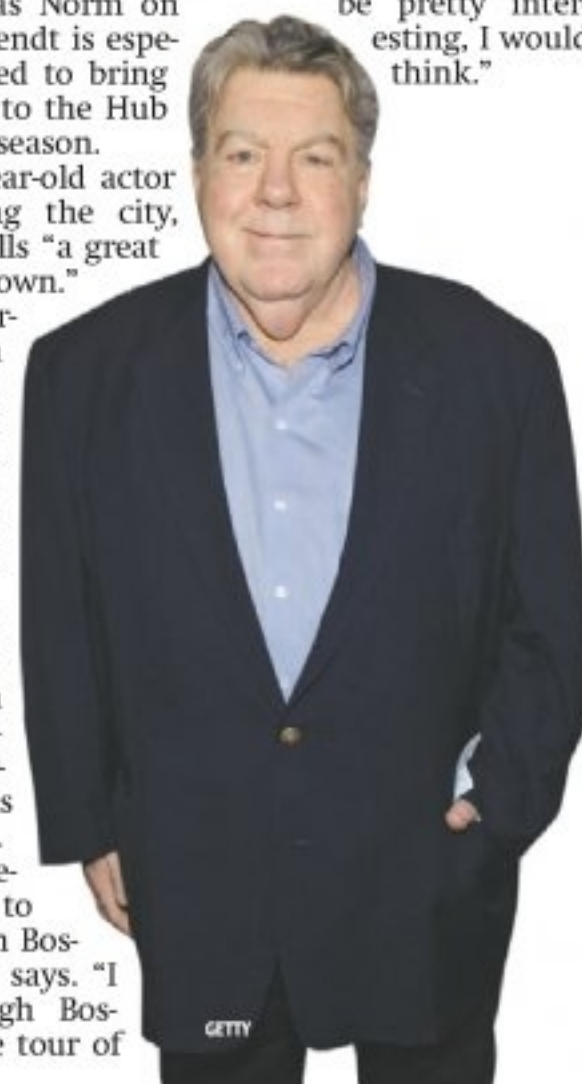

"It's really great to be playing in Boston," Wendt says. "I came through Boston with the tour of

"Elf: The Musical," Nov. 28-Dec. 10, Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston, bochcenter.org

"Twelve Angry Men." Santa is a little bit different than juror No. 1. Still, it's great, palpable energy in Boston. It's my kind of town."

Aside from getting his song and dance numbers down for his return as Santa, Wendt tells Metro that he's "of course" interested in bringing Norm back, should the opportunity arise in the future. While the world of TV seems to be obsessed with reboots these days, he's not confident that "Cheers" will return to the small screen anytime soon.

"Norm would be very happy to be back," Wendt says. "I am not holding my breath, however. But the character of Sam Malone at 70 would be pretty interesting. I would think."

Why the message of 'Hold These Truths' resonates today

"This play should be done in every community in the country."

LINDA LABAN

Now more than ever. That's how Brookline-born theater director Benny Sato Ambush feels about retelling the story of Gordon Hirabayashi in the Lyric Stage's production of Jeanne Sakata's play, "Hold These Truths."

Hirabayashi, an American born of Japanese immigrants, resisted World War II internment laws that forced around 120,000 Americans of Japanese descent into West Coast camps after the Pearl Harbor strike. Sato Ambush feels this story needs to be heard now.

"This play should be done in every community in the country to generate this civic discussion on who gets to be an American citizen," says Sato Ambush, who lives in Lynn. Other productions in New York City and Washington, D.C. are already in the works.

The Lyric Stage's production stars BU actor school grad Michael Hisamoto ("Stage Kiss") as Hirabayashi, the Seattle-born sociologist who was imprisoned for his protest, stating that the Constitution and his personal rights were violated. Decades later, he was venerated and his sentence overturned. A few months after Hirabayashi's death in January 2012, President Barack Obama awarded him the Presidential Medal of Freedom.

The production honors Hirabayashi's Japanese heritage with the addition of elements of traditional Kabuki Theater. "Hold These Truths" comes to Boston. For Sato Ambush, "Hold These Truths" is not about looking back and pointing fingers, it's a warning and a call to action now.

"Part of me wants people to be surprised when they see it," says Sato Ambush. "There are surprises in the Kabuki conventions we're exploring. We want people to come and hear the story and see it performed and be surprised."

Michael Hisamoto stars as Gordon Hirabayashi. ALL PHOTOS BY HENRY LUSSIER/LYRIC STAGE

For Sato Ambush, "Hold These Truths" is not about looking back and pointing fingers, it's a warning and a call to action now.

"When constitutional mandates fall off the radar as the country veers off the rails, every generation needs to steer it back on course," he says. "We have to keep at it. It's like a car that needs maintenance. A nation needs maintenance and we have to be vigilant in keeping it running properly."

However, Hirabayashi's story is deeply personal to him. His maternal grandfather, Takayuki Yaokawa Sato, was born in Japan and worked on a ship as a cook, eventually finding his way to Cambridge.

"He married my black grandmother, Grace Virginia Sato, and they had five children," Sato Ambush says. "During World War II, my grandmother lost the right to vote because she had married a Japanese man, even though he was already dead by then."

"She worked in Cambridge City Hall. Do you know what her job was?" he adds. "Her job was registering people to vote."

How Hillary Clinton inspired the star of an all-female 'Julius Caesar' play

Actors' Shakespeare Project is bringing an all-female production of "Julius Caesar" to Boston this holiday season.

The new take on the Shakespeare classic, which debuts at Studio 210 this week, draws a bit of inspiration from the 2016 presidential election. Liz Adams, who plays the famed Roman politician, reveals to Metro that Hillary Clinton served as her muse while she formed her take on Caesar.

"Honestly, a little bit of it came from Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign," Adams says. "She's a strong leader, and that's certainly true of Caesar as well."

While a New York production of the play generated controversy over the summer for having its Caesar don a Trump-style costume, don't expect to see any pantsuits on this version of the Roman leader. In this case, the inspiration is less overt, drawing more from the spirit of Clinton's failed campaign, which had a Shakespearean quality to it.

"Caesar's not really the bad guy," says Adams. "It's a tragedy because nobody is really a bad guy. They're doing the best they can and they're doing what they think they're called on by the needs of their country to do."

Between an all-female cast and design team, as well as having Bryn Boice in the director's chair, this version of "Julius Caesar" celebrates women in every aspect of the production. However, Adams doesn't believe that the female-focused play should be that big of a deal, considering how prevalent all-male plays have been throughout the centuries.

"It's a big deal, but it kind of shouldn't be," Adams says.

However, the actress does believe that the time is right to shine a light on artistic female voices, especially with the #MeToo campaign and all the stories about sexual harassment making headlines.

"The time's really right to hear these words with women's voices and to see what the vision of a female director and design team can bring us," Adams says. "I'm really pleased to be participating in this process now."

Some alternatives to watching "It's a Wonderful Life" again.

CATHERINE PERLOFF

Considering all the stress that comes with the end of the year and the holiday season, the ability to step out of regular life into a completely new world is impossibly alluring. Indeed, a night at the theater never fails to be the most powerful remedy to all holiday woes. Check out our guide to five of the most exciting plays in Boston this winter.

"A Christmas Carol"

This unique version of the Christmas-time story weaves past with present. Set in a city suspended between Victorian and modern-day London, this show uses puppetry, music and dancing to turn the old story into a modern day holiday spectacle. Nov. 24-Dec. 31, Central Square Theater, 450 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, $16+, centralsquaretheater.org

"Sense and Sensibility"

Check out a new twist on the Jane Austen classic of the two Dashwood sisters learning to understand love and themselves. Adapted by Kate Hamill and directed by Eric Tucker, this play makes Austen accessible, even to her biggest skeptics, with energetic performances and a rotating stage setup. Dec. 10-Jan. 14, Loeb Drama Center, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge, $25+, americanrepertorytheater.org

"Hip-Hop Nutcracker"

Come for a contemporary, hip-hop version of the beloved holiday story, complete with dancers, a violinist, a DJ and MC Kurtis Blow. The performance takes the classic tale to the present; for example, Act II is set not in the Land of Sweets, but in the '80s Brooklyn nightclub Maria-Clara's parents met. Dec. 21-Dec. 23, Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont, $25+, boch-center.org

"Shakespeare in Love"

Based on the Oscar-winning film of the same name, the show follows Shakespeare's romance with one of his actors, and the resulting drama that unfolds in his play's plot and production. Jan. 12-Feb. 10, Calderwood Pavilion at the Boston Center for the Arts, 527 Tremont St., $25+, bostontheatrescene.com

"Bad Dates"

Hayley Walker has a common problem: a string of bad luck in the dating world. However, her coping mechanism may be a bit unconventional. In "Bad Dates," Hayley shares her stories around a series of unfortunate dates with the audience in this monologue. Jan. 26-Feb. 25, Avenue of the Arts/Huntington Avenue Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, $25+, huntingtontheatre.org

Red Bull is bringing an epic 'Street Fighter' tournament to Boston

Get ready for esports, VR and more at Battle Grounds.

Championships are pretty common here in Title-town, but now it's time for esports athletes to shine in Boston.

After bringing its popular flutag event to the Hub last year, Red Bull is heading back to the city with an epic "Street Fighter V" video-game tournament. That's right, hundreds of the nation's top gamers will converge in Boston for Red Bull Battle Grounds, which goes down Nov. 18-19.

More than 500 competitors will get the chance to go head-to-head as Ryu, Chun-Li and the rest of the "Street Fighter" crew at a pretty nifty venue called The Castle at Park Plaza.

Battle Grounds will be a significant event for the gamers involved, as they vie for a spot in Sunday's grand finals. Champions from Red Bull's monthly regional Proving Grounds tournaments will get the chance to compete against a slew of other players in Saturday's 512-player, open-bracket qualifier.

Red Bull Battle Grounds stops in Boston this weekend. PROVIDED

The winner of day one will go on to face the top seven competitors from the Capcom Pro Tour Regional Leaderboards during an eight-player tournament to decide who takes home the North America "Street Fighter V" crown. The champ will also earn a spot in the Capcom Pro Tour's biggest event of the year, Capcom Cup 2017.

Local gamers who want to test their skills can register online for $10, while spectators can attend free.

In addition to the tournament, the event will also have "Street Fighter II," "Street Fighter 3rd Strike" and "Ultra Street Fighter 4" tournaments going on that fans can participate in to celebrate the franchise's 30th anniversary this year. If that's not enough action for you, make sure to check out the virtual-reality experience that will be on display throughout the weekend. Fans will get to full immerse themselves into the game at the "Street Fighter II" VR bonus stage.

And should you feel like partying before the fun starts Saturday, head over to Balance Patch on Friday night for a special kickoff event.

Dana Gould on how New England influences his comedy

The Bay State native is back in Boston this weekend. MATT JUUL

If you ask any Boston comic about their comedic inspirations, don't be surprised if they end up mentioning Dana Gould.

The Hopedale native and former writer for "The Simpsons" is a legend among comedy circles thanks to his prowess on stage and work on the small screen. While Gould has definitely left a mark on local comedians, the New England area has been just as big of an influence on the famed comic.

Gould, who performs at Laugh Boston this weekend, tells Metro that his experience growing up with a "stereotypical Massachusetts" family has served as fodder for his stand-up act for decades.

"We had eight people in a three-bedroom house and you had to have a sense of humor to keep from going insane," Gould says. "Everybody in my family is very funny and sarcastic, in that generic New England way. My professional work is really soaked in that stuff."

Of course, Gould isn't the only comedy star to call Boston or New England home, as the region has produced many big names over the years. Gould believes the combination between the area's bitter cold weather, blue-collar work ethic, as well as its large populapeople have a very sort of dark, plangent view of the world, which certainly informs my work and my writing."

Since Gould has such a deep love for the Hub, he jumped at the chance to return to "The Simpsons" for a cameo in last year's Boston-themed episode "The Town." The comedian and writer loved the episode and thought that it really captured the spirit and humor of the city.

Most of all, Gould was glad that he got to show off his Matt Damon impersonation.

"My favorite thing about that episode was the names of stores in Harvard Square," Gould says. "There's no other place on television you're going to get that level of stuff and I just remember being in record trying to mimic Matt Damon saying, 'This is our half,' over and over and over."

He adds, "I used to live in Allston, so I was able to sell it pretty good."

The Hopedale native had a cameo in last year's Boston episode of "The Simpsons." FOX tions of Irish and Italians are the reasons why its tough citizens have such a distinct sense of humor.

"Irish and Italians have a very dark, cynical type of humor," Gould says. "Specifically Irish

Denis Leary wants to play Kellyanne Conway in a Trump biopic

The comedian also opens up about last year's wild Comics Come Home event.

MATT JUUL

Denis Leary and his famous funny friends will once again take over the TD Garden at this weekend's Comics Come Home.

The annual event, which raises funds for the Cam Neely Foundation, had a bit of a hiccup last year as a rowdy crowd booed comedian Wanda Sykes after she cracked jokes about then newly elected president Donald Trump.

While Leary tells Metro that the 2016 show was "an anomaly," don't expect the Worcester native to back off from politics on stage, as he recently released "Why We Don't Suck," a book that hopes to bridge the political divide.

Ahead of Saturday night's show, we caught up with the Boston-bred comic to get his thoughts on last year's debacle, how he's feeling about Trump and why more celebrities should run for office.

Since it was right after the election, things got a little crazy at last year's Comics Come Home.

We've been doing this show for 23 years and that was truly an anomaly. Not to mention, I opened that show with about 20 minutes of material that was anti-Trump and anti-Hillary and the crowd was explosively laughing. I think they recognized the common ground in terms of how uncivil and ridiculous the election had actually been. I think the trouble was, in Nick DiPaolo's case, he went completely anti-Hillary, and in Wanda's case, she went anti-Trump and the crowd felt like they were crossing lines. That's an anomaly. That was just because of the year and the emotion in the air.

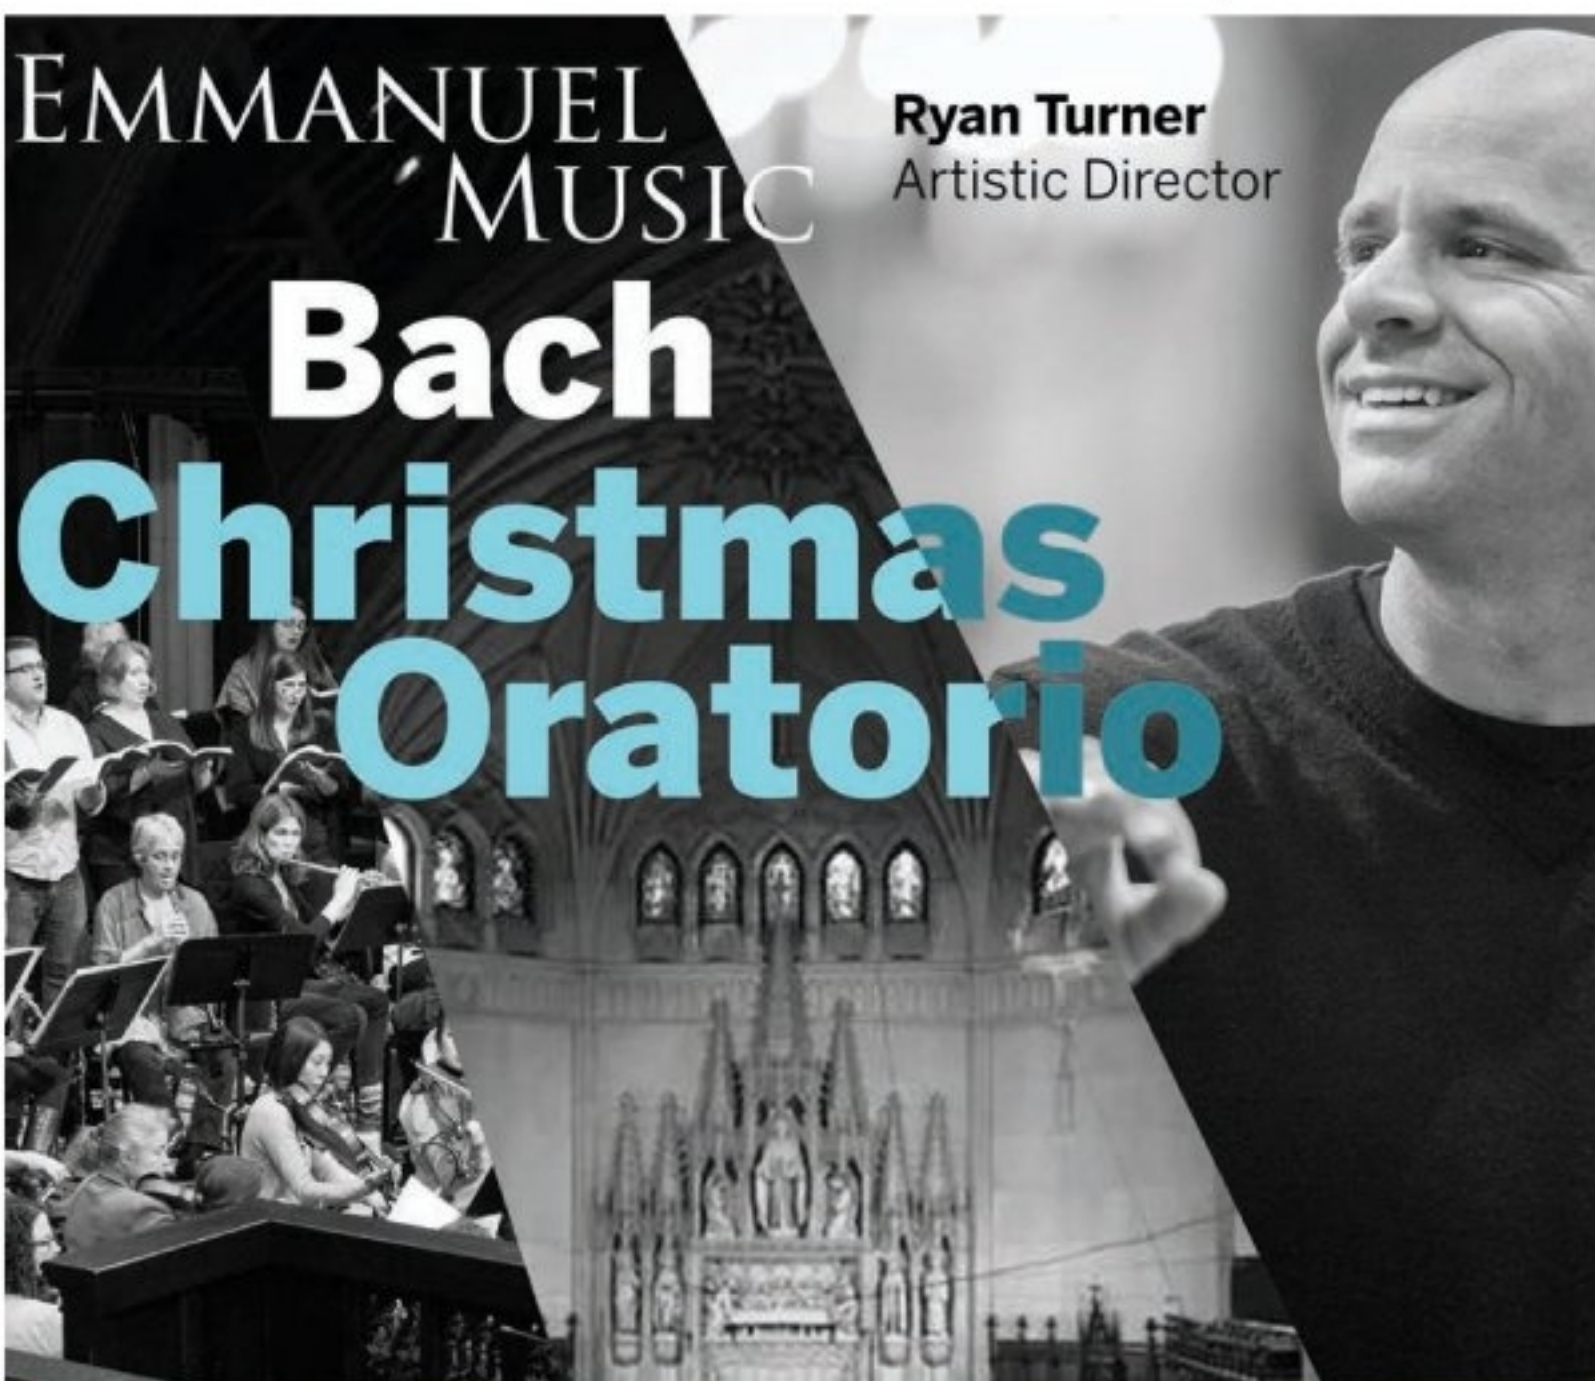

How are you feeling about Trump and the world now that we're a year into his presidency?

I'm really excited because I've already called dibs on the Kellyanne Conway part when they do the HBO Trump biopic, so if I get nothing else out of Trump's presidency, I want that part because I think that's going to be my Emmy.

You make the case for having celebrities run for office in your new book. What do you make of politics in 2017?

I'm trying to make everybody laugh their asses off about all the subjects that seem to be bubbling up to the top right now — racism, sexism, fake news, guns, everything — to remind everybody that there's a lot of common ground. Nothing's getting done while everybody is rage-tweeting. Democrats are rage-tweeting against Republicans, and Republicans are bash-tweeting Democrats and we're at a stalemate. I wanted to remind everybody that one of the great things about this country is that you can fire the people in Washington, in some cases every couple years, and in the case of the president, every four years.

If Democrats want to take over, they better find somebody who can beat Trump. It ain't Bernie Sanders, and it ain't Elizabeth Warren. It might have to be Tom Hanks and Sandra Bullock. That's the reality we're living with right now.

You've also talked about wanting Oprah Winfrey to run for president.

She says no but I'd love to have her because we'd get free stuff every three weeks like cars, toasters. But, listen man, it's no joke. Trump changed the game. If Oprah threw her hat in the ring, believe me, he'd be sweating bullets. Tom Hanks and Sandra Bullock is an unbeatable ticket, I'm telling you right now. Jimmy Fallon and Questlove would scare Trump. It sounds like a joke, but it's half-joking now, in the reality we're living in.

Has Trump been a good or bad thing for comedy?

Our job is always the same. It doesn't matter if it's politics or if it's some of the stuff I cover in the book like racism, sexism, free speech, all that stuff. Our job is to pop the pretentious bubbles. It's pretentious, but it speaks truth to power. The most democratic form of democracy is comedy. People vote in the moment with their mouths and their stomachs. They actually make an audible sound if they think it's funny.

That's why I think this whole politically correct atmosphere is bad for young comics, but it's the part of the job for veterans like myself and Chris Rock and other guys. People cut us more slack because they already expect us to be politically incorrect when it comes to politics and everything else. I think it's important.

Lenny Clarke will perform at this year's event.

Adam Savage spent 14 seasons educating and entertaining fans with "Mythbusters." Now he's bringing the wonder and fun of science to the stage with "Brain Candy Live."

Along with popular YouTube star Michael Stevens, Savage has been touring the country with a two-hour variety show, leaving audiences in awe with breathtaking demonstrations and hilarious performances. Ahead of their stop in Boston this weekend, Savage tells Metro the extravaganza is a bit like "if your high school science teacher had a Las Vegas budget."

"It's like a magic show, but instead of an illusion, what you get is a deeper understanding," says Savage. "'Brain candy' is our term for the pleasure of learning something new, of seeing something from a new vantage point. We've written a show that we hope brings that exact feeling to the audience."

Because "Brain Candy" combines Savage's skills as both a scientist and a showman, he couldn't help but draw comparisons to his experience on the hit Discovery Channel series. Savage admits that "Mythbusters" changed his life and greatly influenced how he presents educational material to fans.

"I am not simply a storyteller or a science communicator, but I'm also a scientist," Savage says. "Making that show fundamentally altered the way I think and the way I process information and how I take counsel from my own brain."

He adds, "That is one of the most singular important things that's ever happened to me, and I love the idea that 'Mythbusters' gave that to others."

While the rise of anti-intellectualism has given science a bad rap in some circles, Savage actually has a positive outlook on the future. He points to his "constantly growing" fan base, as well as the popularity of figures like Neil de Grasse Tyson, as proof positive that not everyone is turning their backs on education.

"Now we have Bill Nye, we have Neil de Grasse Tyson. Stephen Hawking is a rock star," Savage says. "We have multiple science heroes. We're in an age where we can tell a joke about Watson and Crick and the female collaborator they muscled out, and people get it. To me, science literacy is increasing all the time."

Jason Mitchell is immensely proud of "Mudbound," in which he plays a lead character called Ronsel Jackson. Not just because the film is a sweeping, ambitious epic that provides a detailed snapshot of a period seldom seen on screen, but because it confronts issues that have blighted this country from the beginning.

"It's an American story," Mitchell says. "And American history is very taboo. A lot of people have their way of feeling about the slaves being freed, about Harriet Tubman, Nat Turner, the British — about all these different things that helped to create America. But they all have an undertone that people never really want to talk about, and that's race."

Audiences will find that race is squarely in focus when they watch "Mudbound." "It pulls no punches, but leaves you with a breath of fresh air," continues Mitchell. "You don't leave the film wanting to kill somebody. It ends with love. Creating static between people makes this magnetic energy, and then you want to start a dialogue — this is stuff people normally sweep under the rug."

For all of the cathartic and necessary conversations "Mudbound" will no doubt inspire, it was not at all an easy project for cast and crew. "We had 28 days to shoot," shares Mitchell. "It surprises people that it was shot in that time. Plus, we lost some of those (days) due to weather. We were dealing with tornadoes, lightning storms and rain. But the environment and the elements really played into it."

Mitchell's costar, Garrett Hedlund, plays Jamie McAllan, and the character truly resonated with the actor. Both have farming and war stories as a part of their DNA.

But more than a story of war, of PTSD, of division and inequality, both actors hope "Mudbound" is a story of inspiration.

"So many times with films on this subject the consensus has been made — they demonize white people, victimize black people, and it makes it such a thing that we aren't co-existing," says Mitchell. "But we are all in this together."

Hedlund added "This is the portrait of a period. Of families that are brought to odds in this time of brutal social hierarchy, but are brought together by a land in the Mississippi Delta."

"Mudbound" will be released on Netflix on Nov. 17.

Here's the best time to leave Boston for Thanksgiving

Google Maps released data on traffic trends around Thanksgiving, and MassDOT gave tips on how to make sure you're safe while traveling. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Thanksgiving is always one of the busiest travel holidays of the year, and next week will be no different. In fact, it may be more hectic than usual, with a record 28.5 million people expected to fly on U.S. airlines between Nov. 17 and Nov. 28, according to Airlines for America — a 3 percent increase from last year.

The roads and railways are sure to be packed as well, so the Massachusetts Department of Transportation and the MBTA are urging people to be as safe as possible as they travel.

"Our goal is to be very thankful on the Monday after Thanksgiving," MassDOT Secretary Stephanie Pollack said at a news conference.

Pollack urged travelers to be aware of the real-time travel signs along the highways and to check the MassDOT GoTime app or Mass511.com before hitting the road.

She also pleaded with travelers to plan ahead, give themselves extra time so they're not in a rush and to either leave their phone on their dashboard or tucked away.

To ease holiday travel, MassDOT will close down all roadway construction projects by noon on Wednesday, Nov. 22, Pollack said. The department will be monitoring the traffic on Tuesday evening into Wednesday morning and will make adjustments if needed.

Wednesday, Nov. 22 is expected to be one of the busiest travel days over the holiday, officials said, as is Sunday, Nov. 26.

For the Boston area, the best time to hit the road to avoid traffic snags is Thanksgiving Day at 6 a.m., according to Google's data, and the worst time to leave is on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

When it comes to ending your holiday weekend and heading home, the best time to do so without getting stuck in traffic is bright and early 6 a.m. on the Sunday after Thanksgiving, Google Maps data suggests. The worst time to return is Sunday at 3 p.m. — so use that tidbit as an excuse to enjoy a long weekend with the family.

Stonehill's IMC master's degree leads with creativity

WRITTEN BY
Amy Smith

When researching graduate programs, you'll likely see messaging from colleges and universities across an array of media platforms. The goal? Building brand awareness while communicating exactly how they can meet your needs.

It's a perfect example of integrated marketing communications (IMC) at work—marketers, advertisers, public relations specialists, copywriters and graphic designers collaborating to create a convincing message, and then making sure you see it.

"IMC supports messaging that's clear, consistent and carefully linked to be more meaningful and impactful," says Lee

McGinnis, director of Stonehill College's new IMC master's degree program. "It means that communication and marketing departments know what the other is doing so that everyone is on the same page with their messaging."

Stonehill College recently launched its IMC program, steering away from the typically business-centric IMC. It emphasizes creativity and broadens the scope to include communication, marketing and graphic design, which helps students view the marketing field through a variety of lenses.

"IMC is embedded in every industry that provides a service or provides goods in some way," says Melissa Ratliff, director of graduate admission at Stonehill College.

Massachusetts has over 80 institutions offering advanced degrees.

This makes distinctive messaging more important than ever because it's vital in recruiting the next class of students.

"Graduate programs are speaking to a savvy consumer who's aware of finances and the return on their investment," says Ratliff. "Often times, you're using a graduate degree to push your current skill set, and the institution needs to fit within your narrative."

Stonehill's IMC part-time master's degree program lets students graduate in as little as two years. Fall and spring courses meet just one night a week, which is ideal for working professionals. What's more, the interdisciplinary program relates to nearly every field.

"Stonehill really has a handle on the interdisciplinary focus; a real attribute to the program," says Ratliff, adding that the program stands out from an MBA program because it studies issues from many different perspectives, allowing you to better draw out your creativity in your career.

"The IMC program is focused on being innovative," says McGinnis. "We combine the best of the latest creative methods with digital marketing, e-commerce and other high-tech marketing and communications courses to help students elevate their career prospects."

Stonehill College faculty have extensive experience in the field. All are highly regarded professionals in the industry, known for their creativity and networking. Stonehill students also work alongside other working professionals who are looking to advance their careers.

McGinnis, who carried out research on underdogs in sports, society and business, knows the newness of Stonehill's IMC program lets it be more innovative and flexible, but also knows prospective students may see it as an underdog. But being an underdog can actually give you a business advantage.

"One of the examples that always comes up as an exemplar underdog is Avis against Hertz," McGinnis says. "Avis had this old campaign that said, 'We're number two.' Avis used that to their advantage."

"They said that 'Because we're number two, we're going to try harder.' That's what Stonehill is doing. Because we want this program to be successful and for students to spread the word about it, we're going to try harder than anybody else."

Stonehill College is conveniently located in Easton, Massachusetts, just 22 miles from Boston and 35 miles from Providence. This provides access to research, cultural experiences and countless internships. Publications like U.S. News & World Report, The Princeton Review, Bloomberg and Forbes repeatedly single out Stonehill as being among the best when it comes to value, outcomes and a commitment to making the world a better place.

The BOXER
BOSTON HOTELGov. Baker offers new ways to tackle opioid epidemicThe governor outlined new ideas for how to further fight drug addiction. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Less than two years after signing an opioid abuse prevention bill, Gov. Charlie Baker returned Tuesday with a multi-pronged proposal to further ramp up the fight against opioid addiction, including legislation that revives the concept of holding addicts involuntarily for treatment for up to 72 hours.

Baker is aiming, through a combination of new state laws, federal requests and executive actions, to create new pathways for addicts to access treatment, to educate young people on the risks of opioids and to more directly align the healthcare system with the needs of those struggling with addiction.

At a news conference,

Baker said the biggest mistake the state could make would be to get "distracted" and not continue to find ways to help individuals and families experiencing "hell on earth" as they grapple with addiction.

New data released this week by public health officials showed that for the second straight quarter opioid-related deaths had declined from last year, but opioid incidents remain prevalent as the state has worked to make the overdose-reversing drug Narcan more available to first responders.

"We said when we got into this that the first goal was to break the back of the trend, break the back of the trend of prescribing, break the back of the trend on overdoses and break the back of the trend on deaths. I would say that we're starting to make progress on that. But let's face it, no one here, and I certainly don't think anybody in Massachusetts, is going to view this as mission accomplished," Baker said.

The Baker administration, in letters to go out this week to the acting secretary of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Attorney General, plans to ask the federal government to allow states the flexibility to make overdose-reversing naloxone available over the counter and increase access to medication-assisted treatment.

Legislation the governor will file, called the CARE Act, also aims to increase access to treatment services by ensuring treatment beds meet current needs and by expanding access to treatment.

The bill will expand the types of clinicians able to perform addiction evaluations in emergency rooms and require hospitals, many of which are already doing it, to engage patients with voluntary treatment options, such as recovery coaches.

More controversially, Baker has revived the idea of involuntarily holding patients with signs of substance abuse disorders for up to 72 hours. But instead of allowing doctors to involuntarily hold patients in the emergency room who are deemed a danger to themselves or others, the bill would allow clinicians to transfer a patient involuntarily to a treatment facility where they could be held for up to 72 hours.

Trump's proposed border wall has been a major source of controversy. GETTY IMAGES

Cards Against Humanity buys land near border so Trump can't build his wall

The company has launched a special promotion urging people to "save America." LENYON WHITAKER

Cards Against Humanity, a raunchy adult card game, purchased land on the United States-Mexico border in an attempt to thwart President Donald Trump's plans to build his border protection wall.

As part of a special holiday promotion called Cards Against Humanity Saves America, the company behind the insanely popular "party game for horrible people" purchased a plot of vacant land on the border of the U.S. and Mexico border, thus making it extremely difficult for President Trump to construct the border wall.

The company hired a law firm specializing in eminent domain so they can "make it as time-consuming and as expensive as possible for the wall to get built," according to the promotion's website.

"Donald Trump is a preposterous golem who is afraid of Mexicans. He is so afraid that he wants to build a twenty-billion-dollar wall that everyone knows will accomplish nothing," the company says on their website.

They announced the special promotion Tuesday on Twitter, urging people to get involved with their plan to save America.

According to Cards Against Humanity, it's easy to get involved. If you give them $15, you will receive "six America-saving surprises"

"[We want to] make it as time-consuming and as expensive as possible for the wall to get built."

The Cards Against Humanity promotion website

from them in the month of December. The first of the series of surprises will include an illustrated map of the land, a certificate of promise to fight against the wall and "a few other surprises."

When it comes to the surprises, Cards Against Humanity appears to have a few tricks up their sleeve and they encourage Trump voters not to participate. And considering the nature of the adult party game, these "surprises" they have in store for the country will probably be just as audacious.

"It will be fun, it will be weird, and if you voted for Trump, you might want to sit this one out," the company states on their website.

The company is also known for having special promotions, which include hilarious stunts during the holiday season. Last year, the company raised around $100,000 to dig a hole in the middle of nowhere to celebrate Black Friday. In 2014, the company purchased a small island just off the coast of Maine and called it "Hawaii 2," and gave 250,000 people who purchased their $15-holiday card pack 1 square foot of land. The licenses were later revoked in a court agreement.

The Mooch wants to publish a book about his 10-day White House tenure

The former White House communications director never lacks for things to say. MICHAEL MARTIN

Anthony "The Mooch" Scaramucci wants to sell a book about his 10-day career in politics.

The former White House communications director — who was fired by incoming chief of staff John Kelly after giving an extremely indiscreet interview to the "New Yorker" — has been taking meetings with potential publishers, "Page Six" reports. Scaramucci is represented by Trident Media Group, whose clients include Jon Stewart, Paris Hilton and Deepak Chopra.

Scaramucci, a financier whose other works include the books "Hopping Over the Rabbit Hole" and "The Little Book of Hedge Funds," was hired by President Donald Trump to take over the White House press operation in July, over the objections of then-Chief of Staff Reince Priebus and then-Press Secretary Sean Spicer.

He lost his job just 10 days into the gig.

Let's save The Mooch the trouble of writing a book, and take a look back at his vibrant White House career.

Ryan Lizza of The New Yorker said Scaramucci told him he'd fire the entire communications staff if Lizza didn't tell him who leaked information about a White House dinner. Scaramucci then called Priebus a "paranoid schizophrenic, a paranoiac" and said he was about to be fired, and claimed he had taken his job with a different motivation than presidential adviser Steve Bannon.

"I'm not Steve Bannon, I'm not trying to suck my own c—," he said.

Scaramucci ended the interview by saying,

"Yeah, let me go, though, because I've gotta start tweeting some shit to make this guy crazy." Then, over Twitter, Scaramucci seemed to accuse Priebus of leaking information about him. "In light of the leak of my financial info which is a felony. I will be contacting @FBI and the @TheJusticeDept #swamp @Reince45," he tweeted.

Scaramucci's press rainbow tour continued — briefly. "There are people inside the administration that think it is their job to save America from this president," he told CNN's "New Day" on July 27. "OK, that is not their job. Their job is to inject this president into America."

Four days later, Trump fired him.

TRUMP ON TWITTER

Trump can't keep his mass shooting condolences straight
President Donald Trump is having trouble keeping America's mass shootings straight.

On Tuesday, in tweeting his condolences about the Northern California shooting that injured 10 and killed five, the beleaguered consoled-in-chief referred to the Nov. 5 gun massacre at a Texas church that killed 25. "May God be with the people of Sutherland Springs, Texas," he tweeted after the massacre. "The FBI and Law Enforcement has arrived."

On Nov. 5, the day of the church shooting in Texas, Trump wrote, "May God be w/ the people of Sutherland Springs, Texas. The FBI & law enforcement are on the scene. I am monitoring the situation from Japan."

The erroneous tweet was up for 10 hours before Trump deleted it on Wednesday morning. In Rancho Tehama, California, on Tuesday morning, a gunman went on a shooting rampage across seven sites including an elementary school.

The gunman, who used a semiautomatic rifle and two handguns, was killed by law enforcement after about 45 minutes. Authorities said the gunman appeared to be firing at random.

"It was very clear at the onset that we had an individual that was randomly picking targets," said Tehama County Assistant Sheriff Phil Johnston. He was named as Kevin Janson Neal, 44, on Wednesday morning, and the death toll was raised from four to five. MICHAEL MARTIN

JOSHUA CROUTHAMEL

For nearly 60 years Central Florida has been the go-to destination for speed freaks and geeks the world over, and for very good reason.

Home to the Daytona International Speedway, the worlds of NASCAR and motorcycle racing revolve around (and around, and around) this particular track. Or tracks, rather — there's both a 2.5-mile stretch for NASCAR and a 3.56-mile course for sports cars and motorcycles, known for their 31-degree terrifying turns. Known to who? Just about everyone. The Daytona 500, the most prestigious race in automotive sporting, consistently sells out every single one of the 101,500 stadium seats (not counting fans who camp infield), but the track is used for events year-round.

What's going on at the Speedway when a big race isn't being beamed into your favorite bar or onto your big screen? We took a look around to find out why it's worth an in-person visit even when the season is set to "park."

Motorsports Hall of Fame

Previously located in Michigan, the Motorsports Hall of Fame did the long-distance drive to Daytona and is now located at the Speedway. Check out their exhibits on stock cars, sports cars, open-wheel, motorcycles and more, and take selfies next to the bronze busts of your favorite drivers (currently there are 230 in the Hall of Fame).

Speedway VIPs

Ride-or-die fans will flip for the VIP Speedway tour ($52 per adult), which brings you behind the scenes of the world's only motorsports stadium. Over the course of three hours you're able to inspect the place with the precision of a pit boss and be afforded unprecedented access (and views — save space on your phone for photos from the Houston Lawing Press Box). Your guide will introduce you to some of the sport's most important artifacts, and no doubt share a few inside baseball stories from the lot.

Casual fans can top up the tank with an abridged 90-minute tour ($25 per adult), which takes in many of the Speedway's highlights and still affords the awesome views that will light up your Instagram likes.

Where to shop, sip and stay

At the end of this year the highly anticipated ONE DAYTONA will be cutting all sorts of ribbons as it opens doors to boutique hotels, shopping, entertainment options and more ... just across the street from the Speedway. Think of it as your official pit when off course.

When it comes time to book accommodation at ONE DAYTONA, there's "The Daytona" (opening in early 2018) which promises 145 upscale rooms designed "with motorsports in mind," 105 rooms at the Fairfield Inn & Suites by Marriott, and even condos if you decide you can't bear to live more than a mile from the heady exhaust fumes of the track. For more information, cruise control into onedaytona.com

Getting there

It's surprisingly easy to get to Daytona Beach International Airport from the Northeast: New Yorkers have access to direct flights, and just one connection separates Boston and Philadelphia from the hallowed asphalt. If you're adding a visit to Orlando to your itinerary, direct flights await from virtually anywhere. 0 to 575mph in no time.

Fodor's Travel

Up Helly Aa

Up Helly Aa marks the end of the yule season in Shetland, Scotland, and is celebrated with a ton of fire festivals that honestly make it seem like you are in literal hell. An honorary Guizer Jarl is elected as the festival's leader, and he leads his Jarl Squad of supporters around, as along with many other additional squads (guizers). The festival involves a lot of marching with torches which are eventually used to set a gigantic replica Viking ship ablaze.

Night of the Radishes

An annual radish-carving festival is held in Oaxaca, Mexico on Dec. 23, when everyone carves a bunch of radishes into little radish people to create scenes reenacting the birth of Jesus. This began as a way that farmers just tried to get people to buy their produce at farmers markets because they'd be more eye-catching to customers, who'd be like, "Oh my, that vegetable looks just like Jesus, I should buy that one and not a regular radish," but now it's just a big event where money is awarded to whoever can carve the best biblical radish people.

The Battle of the Oranges

This Italian holiday takes place at a carnival where a bunch of people dress in peculiar outfits and throw oranges at each other — presumably because Spain already claimed tomatoes. So, the answer, of course, is to stuff oranges down their shirts (seriously), then throw them at each other (possibly injuring everyone involved), as well as, of course, wasting the heck out of a ton of oranges. It honors an event that happened in Ivrea in 1194, when villagers got real mad at a villainous Italian Count and threw rocks at him.

Silent Day

Indonesia's Nyepi Day (Silent Day) happens

around mid-March in Bali to celebrate the new year. Everybody has to stay completely quiet all day — you are not allowed to speak for any reason. Also, you're not allowed to eat or work or do much of anything at all, really. You're just supposed to sit around and do a 12-hour self-reflection. And don't even think about cheating — they've got guards patrolling the streets! Happy New Year and please shut up, thanks.

Failed Raid

The Raiders were slated to be one of the Patriots' chief competitors in the AFC this season. At 4-5 that is not quite the case, but Oakland could very well be in the mix when all is said and done. Oakland has had a rough schedule and is still very much alive in the playoff picture. In games that QB Derek Carr has started this season, the Raiders are 4-4, having beaten the Dolphins, Chiefs, Jets and Titans. Under Carr's watch they lost to the Redskins, Broncos, Chargers and Bills.

Carr looked pretty good against the Dolphins on Nov. 5, completing 21-of-30 for 300 yards, one touchdown and one interception. He is still banged up from an early October injury in which he had a broken bone in his back but is steadily regaining his form.

Tom Terrific

Tom Brady was back in MVP form against the Broncos this past Sunday, completing 25-of-34 passes for 266 yards, three touchdowns and zero picks. His sparkling 125.4 passer rating helped earn him AFC Player of the Week honors. The three touchdowns that Brady threw were the most since his sensational outing against the Texans in Week 3, when he tossed five TDs. Brady should have an even easier time this week solving the Raiders pass defense, which ranks 22nd in the NFL - giving up 244.6 yards per game.

Slow build

Everyone hates this phrase and it's tough to watch (just once it would be nice to see Bill Belichick create a take-no-prisoners style defense like he coached in the 1980s and '90s with the Giants) but the Patriots are back to their "bend but don't break" ways. Despite their stark turnaround on defense in recent weeks, the Pats still statistically own the worst pass defense in football - giving up 287.2 yards per game. The run defense stats aren't much better. The Pats are allowing 121.1 yards per game on the ground. But in the most important defensive statistic, the Patriots are getting much, much better. They're now giving up 21.7 points per game this season, which places them 14th overall. The Pats ranked No. 1 in this category a season ago, giving up just 15.6 points per game. The next closest team was two full points behind them (Giants at 17.8 ppg).

Celtics put streak on line against kings of the streak

There was considerable Warriors versus Celtics NBA Finals buzz at the start of this basketball season but the Gordon Hayward injury was thought to have thrown all of that off.

One full month into the 2017-18 NBA calendar and that buzz is again being heard, as the Celtics (13-2) and the defending champion Warriors (11-3) have the best records in the league. Thursday night at the Garden (8 p.m., TNT), the two teams will clash in what is the biggest game of this young pro basketball season. The Celtics, owning a 13-game win streak, will face the kings of the basketball streak in the Warriors.

In December of 2015, Golden State came to Boston with an unreal 24-game win streak and the C's took them to OT, ultimately falling, 124-119.

Kyrie Irving will likely don the mask again Thursday night. GETTY IMAGES

The Celtics have given the Warriors relative fits the past two years, as they've split the season series with Golden State in back-to-back seasons. Of course, this year's Celtics team is much different from those teams. But the fear from most NBA teams is that this year's Celtics group is actually better than those squads ... much better.

"It sure looks like Boston is the team of the future in the East, with the assets that they still have and their young talent and their coaching, and Kyrie [Irving] is amazing," Warriors head coach Steve Kerr said this week. "That looks like a team that is going to be at the top of the East for a long time to come. Whether their time is now or the future, that's to be determined but they sure look like they want it to be right now."

Irving hit a dagger of a 3-pointer with 53 seconds left to beat the Warriors in Game 7 of the 2016 NBA Finals and was sensational overall in the Finals trilogy between the two teams. Irving averaged 26.5 points per game in those three Finals, including a 2016 Game 5 performance in which he poured in 41 points. MATT BURKE
